

Watcher
by Nishaun Smith

Imagine one day you are in an office building with a colleague that you know to be an atheist. Neither of you are wearing watches, you know that there will be a meeting later that day at 1:00 and the time is coming soon. You quickly ask another colleague for the time. He looks at his watch and you glance at it to confirm that it is in fact 12:55. Your atheist friend angrily states he doesn't believe anything and he runs down a few flights of stairs, you spot your colleague outside with scientific instruments and a calculator looking at the sun and taking notes obviously trying to detect what time it is by the sun's position. Your other friend with a watch warns you that the time is at hand and you turn away from the window and enter into your meeting with your boss and the friend that told you the time. You learn that this meeting is a discussion on the importance of punctuality in the work place.

www.nishaun.com

www.about-god.org

Copyright © 1999 by Nishaun Smith

Feel free to copy do not alter or sell.